   (b) To study strategic practices for creating knowledge and dynamism in global management, including the best practices in Japan and other APO member countries; and
   (c) To discuss how APO member countries can improve their strategies for global management and create knowledge in their own settings.

10. Background:
The first Top Management Forum was launched in 1985 as a special project principally targeting the top managers of business corporations. In light of the rapidly changing business environment and increased global competition in the Asia-Pacific region, the significance of the Top Management Forum as a platform to discuss emerging management topics has been recognized among APO member countries. The forum aims to share information on state-of-the-art corporate management practices adopted and promoted by leading Japanese enterprises and prominent companies from other APO member countries. Synergistic effects are expected during mutual discussions of the best management examples and practices.
In the development of the global economy, enterprises are forced to change management strategies drastically, including the value creation process, knowledge creation system, or even corporate philosophy and organizational culture. Previously, knowledge and value created in specific countries were transferred to other countries without modification. Now, however, knowledge and value may be created in various nations or regions and adapted elsewhere based on local conditions and acceptance of cultural diversity. Enterprises therefore need to identify their core competence and corporate culture, determine what they value most, and modify their management systems to suit the global context.

The 27th Top Management Forum will study the features of Asian dynamism and knowledge creation in the context of global management, attempt to predict future management trends, and identify the characteristics of successful top executives.
