1. Objectives

- a. To introduce basic tools for evaluating the requirements and principles for developing, implementing, and evaluating a smart regulation; and
- b. To acquaint participants with the concepts of innovation, government digital services, and egovernment systems to increase effectiveness and efficiency in meeting public needs and promote the quality of regulatory governance.

2. Background

A smart regulation delivers clearly defined, measurable policy objectives and is set through a transparent, objective, consultative process. Its emphases are twofold: outcomes (effective delivery); and real involvement of the people concerned. Studies suggest that the benefits of a smart regulation arise from the recognition that a well-crafted regulation can improve competitiveness, facilitate market openness, improve living standards, protect the environment, enhance transparency, and support the rule of law. Accordingly, a smart regulation serves clearly identified policy goals and produces benefits that justify the costs, considering the distribution of effects across to the economy, environment, and society. It also promotes innovation through market incentives and adheres to principles facilitating competition, trade, and investment. Ultimately, to earn the trust and confidence of citizens, a smart regulation must fulfill its promises through well-targeted conception, effective design, and committed implementation by the government.

The APO has focused on public-sector productivity growth in recent years. Under the APO public-sector productivity framework, various initiatives have been undertaken to help improve the motivation and skill level of public officials, strengthen management systems, and enhance performance given the changing environment and current commitment to public-service renewal in many countries including regulatory reforms. As part of continuing capacity-building initiatives for the public sector, this course will introduce the tools available for evaluating the requirements and principles for developing, implementing, and evaluating a smart regulation. It will also acquaint participants with the concepts, essentials, and importance of smart regulatory frameworks and regulatory management systems that will enhance public-sector productivity and the quality of regulatory governance in APO members.

3. Modality of Implementation

- a. This training course will be conducted online using videoconference applications.
- b. The resource speakers and participants will participate the course virtually using their own devices, applications, and Internet connections.
